If stunt car driving, motorcycles, fire and Jeremy Clarkson is your thing, then this is definitely for you. Having watched many episodes of Top Gear on TV, the BBC team have managed to capture the magic of their show in a live environment.

From the moment, the lights went down, I was captivated! The show started with clever acted out live advertisements and then going on to stunt car driving and stunt motorcycles. The live show even incorporating some of the elements of it's television counterpart, such as a challenge of making a car. The team also came into the audience to make fun of Audi drivers. In fact, there was quite a high level of audience participation and, along with a pair of 3d glasses, people were handed a sheet with 'hot and cold / left and right' sides that could be used to vote or drive a car on screen. The computer apparently being able to pick up the colour of the side of the sheet that the audience was showing. I did find this a bit gay but I give them an A for effort!
