The London Dungeons are BRILLIANT.

They transport you back to a gruesome time where they used various methods to torture people. I personally liked the hosepipe down someone's throat which pumped water until their body exploded! It's like a waxwork of scenes of torture. They have the history of some of the people including their heinous crimes and the way in which information was gleaned from them.

Some of the scenes are quite horrific, but the staff try to lighten things up....when they aren't making you jump out of your skin.

You also get to partake in a crime investigation of Jack the Ripper - Who was he? It's a real historic experience too and focuses on Old London town, the Great Fire of London and many of the prolific killers from back in the day. Worthy performance. The staff get very involved too - One of them took me aside at one point and asked me to jump out on the rest of the group with an ear-piercing scream. I willingly obliged - It was Hitchcock-worthy performance.

It's eerie and creepy as you would expect. I guess the clue to that is in the name, it's sure is a relief to see the light of day again.
